THE NORTHERN NECK. Wakefield Burying-Ground-Painful Accident-Briefs.

COMORN, KING GEORGE COUNTY,

VA., April 8 .- (Special.)-The impression prevailing in many parts of the country that nothing remains to mark the location of the old Washington burial-ground at Wakefield, the birthplace of the first President, in Westmoreland county, is erroneous. It is true that the spot, which should be held as a secred treasure, has not received the tender care and attention it deserved, and it may be true that planist, and Miss Allen, violinist, will take part.

As far as is known, the old burial-As far as is known, the old burlal-ground at Wakefield contains graves of but two members of the Washington family, and these are marked by head-stones, now gray with age, moss-covered, and somewhat defaced and crumbling from long neglect. Close by them stand two tail, venerable trees, which have sur-vived the gales of many winters and devived the gales of many winters and de-fled the fiercest storms of summers, as if spared to keep silent watch and warn visitors to the historic "birthplace" that he who approaches them treads upon hal-lowed ground. Corroding time, moss, and dirt have done their cruel work so well dirt have done their cruel work so well that the inscriptions on the two tombstones are well-nigh obliterated, so that the letters must be traced with pen-knife or other pointed instrument in order to render them readable. One of them bears testimony that John Washington, eldest son of Lawrence Washington, was buried there in January, 1899, and that he died when in the 19th year of age. Some suppose that this "John Washington" was the namesake (named after) his father's brother, who came to this country some brother, who came to this country some time, probably the middle, in the seven-Mrs. Edward Wilkening thee Carrington) will leave very soon for Cuba to teenth century. A number of other names are on this stone, supposably a partial list of persons related to the deceased, but they are not easily decipherable. The belief that nothing remains to indicate the location of Washington, stayed has probably these Washington graves has probably grown out of the fact that Mount Vernon. Wakefield's famous rival, is so in-separably associated with the name of our country's first President that the honored old birthplace has had to take a hack seat in the public mind, and, to a great extent, be almost consigned to oblition by an inexcusable national govern-ment until recent years—the closing dement until recent years—the closing de-cade of this century—when a wharf and monument were crected there. Since the tomb has been made famous the world over, but little is thought and known of the birthplace, especially by the rising generation. An able writer said several
